Join us for a discussion dedicated to reflecting upon and improving Shakespearean-focused pedagogy through both theory and practice using global media and socio-culturally aware teaching techniques.

Students often shy away from Shakespeare in their classes, but educators can also get nervous about teaching the Bard! Our goal for our pedagogical discussion is to reflect on our own experiences learning about and teaching Shakespeare in the classroom and how we can enhance our future teaching practices, particularly through the lens of utilizing global media and socio-culturally aware pedagogy. We will provide links to optional pre-event resources after registration, but we invite everyone from any discipline interested in developing their understanding of the Bard in the classroom to join us in our discussion!
